Dee Pangilinan I may be misunderstanding this, but I read this from the article: "the Philippines. . . had served as an air-sea linchpin for America after World War II." A linchpin is defined as "a person or thing that holds something together : the most important part of a complex situation or system." So it seems the writer is implying that it's the US who needs the Philippines, more the Philippines needs the US...?

"Even today, I'm struggling to try and emulate that guitar introduction to "When Doves Cry." It's just a testament to his extraordinary technique."

Wait. When you say emulate — you mean you try to play it and you can't?

"I continually come back to attempting to piece together each and every one of those segments. And it's very short. It's not an extended solo by any means. But the way it is delivered. There's certainly no way to write it. You've just got to dive in and feel it to see if you could come close."

Melenita Nucum-Shirley I am crushed Paul. I love him, love his music. indeed he's in our age. He was in Toronto couple of weeks back. He held a very intimate surprise concert. It was intended for small audience but they were not able to hide it from the fans. They swarmed the venue. I couldn't watch coz I didn't know. I am profoundly sad.

#Greenroofs offer #homeowners and the public a wide range of benefits. They capture rain and lessen the amount of stormwater runoff into city sewers and watershed. They drastically lower utility bills by reducing the need for air conditioning. And they have become a coveted feature for buyers looking to purchase a home in the Washington region.

According to the District Department of Energy and Environment (DOEE), there are about 2.3 million square feet of green roofs in the city. The department plans to increase that by another million square feet over the next 10 years. To reach this goal, it has instituted several green roof #incentive programs.'
